The Trends

loyalty noun

loy·al·ty

'lɔɪ(-ə)l-tē

: the quality or state or an instance of being loyal
| the loyalty of the team's fans

Digital customer acquisition costs are up 222% in the last 10 years. Impulse buying is waning as shoppers increase caution. And brand loyalty is at an all-time low, with 77% of shoppers say they'll buy from competitors if they are cheaper and more convenient.

Loyalty is everyone's job, and digital channels are primed to be an engine for retention and loyalty.

But how? What drives brand loyalty?

The Stanley Cup craze of 2024 shows how loyalty can drive fandom and evangelism for your brand.

Shopper loyalty comes down to three things:

Make it easy for me.

Connect with me.

Reward me.

When shoppers feel loyal, 70% will spend up to two times or more on brands they are loyal to, compared to 49% of consumers with low loyalty engagement.

Think you've lost your loyal shoppers? Think again! 69% are willing to be won back, citing more attractive discounts (56%), improved product or service quality (44%), a broadened range of products (36%), and better customer service (36%).

Make it easy for me.

92% of shoppers say their favorite brand provides consistent experience regardless of where they interact with it.

It's not about fancy loyalty programs, either. Brilliant basics win. Shoppers cite foundational commerce elements such as assortment (79%), availability (78%), and quality (72%) as top - and critical - loyalty-drivers.

Sound easy? It's not! 88% of US shoppers said that online retailers failed to meet their expectations in these key areas at least 1-3 times last year alone.

Takeaway: Take a hard look at your foundational elements - price, selection, availability, and consistency across channels. Are you meeting the shopper where they're at?

Connect with me.

85% of shoppers say their favorite brand treats them like an individual, and 88% say their favorite brand uses their data in ways that make them comfortable.

Yet, personalization can be a trust-buster if done incorrectly or irresponsibly. Over half of global shoppers have received irrelevant content or offers and dislike ads based on indirect tracking tools.

Takeaway: It's easier than it sounds – make sure your audience receives up-to-date, personalized information about your products consistently - and treat their data with care.

"Put your followers in the best position to promote your brand. You're never too big to have those conversations. Keep as close of a pulse on your customers as possible."

Reward me.

Rewarding shoppers for their business is important: 88% of shoppers say their favorite brand rewards them for their loyalty, and 43% say they're relying more on loyalty program benefits vs. last year.

However, it's not all about points and discounts. One third of shoppers find value in receiving exclusive access to products or services, while a quarter find value in personalized product or service suggestions.

"If all you focus on is the transaction, then all you'll get is a transactional relationship in return."

- Trent Lanning, Sr. Researcher at Marigold

Takeaway: As far as loyalty driving initiatives, brands get what they put into them. Identifying goals early and tracking against them is key, from engagement to activation metrics.

Takeaways

Make it easy for me.

Loyalty starts with meeting the shopper where they're at. Delivering on brilliant basics such as shopper experience, consistency across online/in-store channels, assortment, and pricing are key to driving long term loyalty.

Connect with me.

Developing consistency, timeliness, and personalization to messaging goes a long way. Erroneous or far-reaching data use/personalization can be a trust buster, so keep it simple.

Reward me.

Everyone wants to feel appreciated, and with inflation still strong, shoppers are spending more cautiously. Finding easy yet creative ways to reward your best customers will build more loyalty than complicated loyalty or membership programs.
